

SCRS Global Oncology Workstream Meeting Summary January 2021

2021 is off to a great start for both the Oncology Education and Site Assessment and Engagement workstreams within the SCRS Oncology Program. Both groups met this week to kick the new year off by setting their sights on the objectives both wish to accomplish over the coming year and how best to meet their goals.

The Education workstream is continuing the momentum they made with their focus on the phase one education project. This project and its outcomes will be designed to assist sites who are looking to venture into this space or those already active in phase one studies an opportunity to enhance their knowledge. The meeting allowed the group to engage related to the first part of this work which comprises the scope of work and what additional resources this project may need. There was great discussion centered on how important addressing benchmarks that exist in this space are, and how we can incorporate them into this work. Additionally, there was conversation around various unique aspects of phase one trials and how to best incorporate them into this work. This all under the context of beginning to refine and build the scope of work.

The Site Assessment and Engagement team focused mainly on developing new objectives and how this committee could best support the needs of the oncology site community. To kick this off, the team agreed that getting a better understanding of who our current audience is in relation to those that participate in oncology research should be our first task. We can then identify where gaps exist and the types of engagement we need to focus on more directly. Answering questions like why our members joined SCRS, and other benefit related analysis will be what this team focuses on in the short term. This will give us the baseline information we need to set meaningful objectives in 2021 around enhancing the oncology program.

As a reminder, our 2021 Global Oncology Site Solutions Summit is less than a month away. The planning team is excited for the engaging content that will be made available in February and encourage you to register today at oncologysitesolutionsummit.com
